A man walked into the bank with a briefcase, spoke with an employee and then opened the case, which appeared to contain a suspicious device made to look like a possible explosive. Everyone exited the bank, leaving the briefcase inside. Police arrived and spoke with the man, who claimed he picked up an unknown subject in Baltimore who gave him the briefcase and forced him to take it into the bank. The man reported that the suspect dropped him off at the bank and then drove off in the man's car. The roads around the bank were closed temporarily while bomb technicians confirmed the device was not dangerous.
